The “Deep State” is the proto-government aimed at the creation of a “New World Order” (Novus Ordo Seclorum), a world ruled by one government. This is undoubtedly the organization referred to by President John F. Kennedy in a speech given at the Waldorf Astoria in April 1961: (Cont’d. at the bottom of this frame.)

MODUS OPERENDI

Operation Ghost

Perhaps the most exciting idea lurking behind AI is the notion that robots, highly developed ones, mind you, will be capable of conscious thought. Those who create such robots will take on a godlike status. As robots become capable of ever more complex work, they will take over human jobs, leaving a majority of humanity as redundant, “useless eaters,” as the saying goes. All of which fits rather well with the project of genocide.

Further, the view will inevitably develop that as conscious beings, robots will be granted “citizenship” of one kind or another, taking over the privileges once granted to humans. “Killing” a robot (rendering it non-operational) will be considered a capital crime. As for intellectual levels of operation, some robots will come to be considered as supreme intellects, world leaders in philosophical and scientific thought. And so on. The term “transhuman” will be sold as the inevitable evolutionary step for the human race as a whole, whether the resulting race is a human/robot hybrid or not.

The key question in all of this is whether robots will ever develop conscious thought, including the whole panoply of feelings and emotions enjoyed by human beings. The AI community apparently believes that such a transition is not only possible but inevitable. Alan Turing’s Imitation Game plays a central role in detecting whether a robot is conscious or not. If you interview a robot, it can always be programmed to give a satisfactory answer. In other words it may be technically impossible ever to prove that a robot has no conscious “mind”.

At this point we bring in two luminaries in the world of neurology and philosophy, Sir John Eccles (winner of the Nobel Prize for neurophysiology) and Sir Carl Popper, a philosopher who has laid the foundation for different levels of reality, one of which is inhabited by our minds. The upshot: The “mind” is not in the brain. If that is the case, then no AI project can possibly succeed in developing consciousness. I have this vision of a robot being tortured, screaming with pain, all of it a programmed response to a situation to which the robot is expected to act human. But, under the Eccles-Popper thesis, you might as well be torturing an electric toaster. I find it perversely amusing to imagine people in the deep state in awe of an electric toaster, so to speak.
